English shipping circles are no doubt exercised over the statement made at the monthly meeting of the directors of the Glasgow Chamber of Commerce that the German vessels were making heavy inroads in the trade between England and Valparaiso. The statement showed that German vessels made the voyage inside of 100 days, while the English vessels took from 100 to 120 days on the voyage and more than thirty days to discharge their cargo, which can only be done by paying a rental for twelve months, although the room may be required for only a week or less.
